

Literature Modern Literature Course

Degree Arts, literature, languages Specialisation Literature Course Modern Literature

The modern literature course gives students specialised knowledge in the field of language and literature, in particular through the study of works, but also via more interdisciplinary skills (writing, analysis, synthesis, public speaking, acquisition of at least one modern language). Specialisation is gradually introduced over the three years of the degree.

The ALL field is organised in two portal courses, "Arts" (Plastic arts and Musicology) and "Literature and Languages". The "Arts" and "Literature and Languages" portal courses are based on four types of skills, which are essentially interdisciplinary and linguistic, helping to make reorientation easier.

Admission

Baccalaureate, preferably general.

Skills

§ Analysing an issue and organising ideas.

- Developing a textual research approach and making use of information (textual analysis).
- Constructing a written and / or oral communication.
- § Transmitting knowledge and methods.

After the course

Continuing studies

Students with this degree generally then choose to take an entrance exam (administration, speech-therapy school, etc.) or to continue with a master's degree.

Jean Monnet University provides a range of master's degrees: Literature, Arts, "teaching professions" (primary and secondary schools).

Job openings

The teaching professions are the main opening after literary studies (primary and secondary schools). However, the fields of journalism, publishing in a wide sense (from bookselling to publishing proper), and cultural or heritage research are also promising openings. Some professions can be accessed directly with this degree, however, including as an editorial secretary, in bookshops, as a specialised bookshop advisor or as a library assistant, archivist, receptionist, guide, scientific populariser, etc.

All professions, in fact, that call for high standards in writing and a capacity for analysis and synthesis in the state administrations or even some major companies.
