

Literature, languages & overseas & regional civilisations

English Course

Degree Arts, literature, languages
Specialisation Overseas and Regional Languages, Literatures and Civilisations
Course English

Aims

- § To provide solid training in subjects specific to English studies (civilisation, literature, linguistics) and to help students acquire deeper understanding of the English-speaking world and culture in their vast diversity.
- § Consolidate the two fundamental linguistic skills: spoken and written English.
- § Foster students' bilingualism: teaching in English or in French according to subject.
- § Help students acquire a mastery of the techniques and methods of the discipline: to work independently, to look for information in a foreign language, to analyse information, to recognise specific cultural references, to take into account different social, economic, political and cultural realities, to summarise information and present it in French and English.
- § Provide a sense of multicultural opening: cultural courses (open to students studying other subjects) providing students with a context for the specific information they learn and helping them explore other cultural areas.
- § Provide interdisciplinary teaching: modern language II, textual and digital tools, French grammar, humanist culture, arts and performance, etc.
- § Make adaptation to the university system and life easier through methodological support.
- § Encourage students to take part in life in the English department by joining the Association of English students in St Etienne, Much Ado.
- § Offer study trips as part of international exchange programmes: UK, Ireland, Scotland, Malta, United States, Alaska, Canada, Australia, Japan, South Korea... or as teaching assistants.
- § Help the students choose and plan their future careers.

The ALL field is organised in two portal courses, "Arts" (Plastic arts and Musicology) and "Literature and Languages". The "Arts" and "Literature and Languages" portal courses are based on four types of skills, which are essentially interdisciplinary and linguistic, helping to make reorientation easier.

Admission

Baccalaureate, preferably general.

Skills

- § Understanding, translating and interpreting in different contexts (written and oral applications)
- § Developing specific documentation adapted to a given subject
- § Constructing or adapting communication to an international dimension
- § Taking part in the development of relations and exchanges in a business context
- § Taking part in development and / or cultural facilitation projects
- § Communicating and writing in two foreign languages

After the course

Continuing studies

The course can lead to the MEEF (teaching) master's degree, master's degrees oriented to research work, master's degrees giving immediate access to employment (in library professions, heritage professions, writing professions, translation, multimedia/information/communications, theatre production, etc.), a master's degree in political sciences, to universities with admission with a degree (translation-interpreting, ISIT, ESIT, journalism schools with admission at degree level, such as IJBA in Bordeaux) and to civil service entrance exams.

Job openings

The LLCER course can lead to teaching professions (Capes, Agrégation, etc.), as well as jobs in training, translation, tourism, culture and heritage, archiving, publishing, the civil service and administration, and international exchanges.
